Dear Vlad,

I trust you are finding and eliminating the bugs in your products, but at what price? Is the cost of quality becoming a burden? Vlad, do you have any of the symptoms below of a system that is not performing well?

- A test cycle that takes weeks to complete?
- The Quality Assurance Team working late into the night 7 days a week?
- An all out fire drill requiring volunteers from all departments to do full scale testing just weeks before release?
- Distributors/resellers and worse yet, clients, doing testing by default?
- A test burden that seems to be getting more and more difficult?
- Knowingly releasing the product without desired testing because you simply ran out of time?

These are just some of the many, many symptoms of an under performing testing process. It takes some steps to eliminate these symptoms. This issue will talk about a methodology you can begin implementing quickly to reduce the number of defects introduced to the field.

"The difference is like night and day. With [test] automation there is no expediting, no fire fighting, no week-end crash test exercises. You would have to experience the before and after to appreciate it."
